

Stuck in the middle, feeling the stress

Many of us either have or will support and care for a loved one during our lifetime. Serving as a caregiver can be a great honor, but can also present challenges.

According to a 2018 Securian Financial survey, 8 in 10 caregivers (79%) had a positive caregiving experience. It was either personally fulfilling or strengthened their family relationships.¹

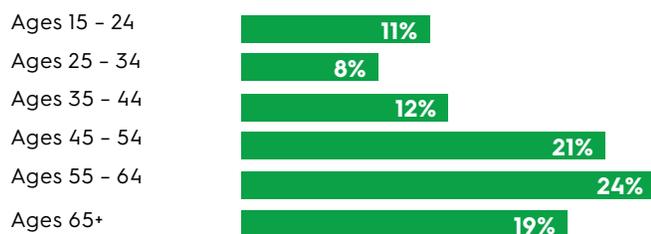

But caring for a family member is a life balancing act and can be stressful. And those “sandwiched” between providing care for their children and parents may feel stuck in the middle.

Nearly 44 million adults in the United States, about 20 percent of the adult population, provide care for aging or disabled family members.² And that number keeps growing. Caregivers span all ages and life stages.

By putting loved ones first, the financial impact on caregivers can be especially challenging – and they may overlook the need to plan for their own future care. The good news is there are solutions.

Now you can anticipate and plan for your health care costs down the road, so you can protect your nest egg – and help your future caregivers feel less caught in the middle.

The growing risk of Alzheimer's

As Americans age, their risk of developing Alzheimer's disease or other chronic illnesses increases. Providing care to those suffering from this disease is expensive and poses a financial risk for families struggling to provide care for loved ones.

More than 5 million Americans are living with Alzheimer's Disease.

By 2050, this number could rise to 16 million.

Caregiving can be a part-time job

Caring for a loved one often requires a large time commitment. According to a 2018 Securian Financial survey, 50 percent of caregivers who were also employed said their caregiving role affected their job performance. In fact, 41 percent reported they had to take time off work.¹ Hiring supportive care can help ease the burden, but finding affordable, quality care can be difficult.

Insurance policy guarantees are subject to the financial strength and claims-paying ability of the issuing insurance company.

Please keep in mind that the primary reason to purchase a life insurance product is the death benefit.

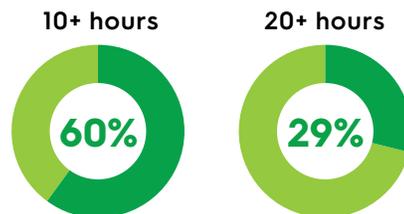

Life insurance products contain fees, such as mortality and expense charges, and may contain restrictions, such as surrender periods.

Additional agreements may be available. Agreements may be subject to additional costs and restrictions. Agreements may not be available in all states or may exist under a different name in various states and may not be available in combination with other agreements.

The accumulation value, surrender value, loan value, and death benefit will be reduced by a long-term care or chronic illness benefit payment. Please consult a tax advisor regarding long-term care benefit payments, chronic illness benefit payments, or when taking a loan or withdrawal from a life insurance contract.
